

It makes little sense to force consumers to pay more for a product that does less in order to make it only slightly more difficult for a determined few (and that is all it takes) to violate copyright laws. It should not be the responsibility of the FCC to enforce copyright laws, particularly at the expense of consumers.